miral on such delicate matters as the Irish question. The opinion is general about the Capitol that Secretary Denby should be allowed to deal with the discipline and that the Senate should not attempt to interfere.

Senators are being flooded with telegrams relating to Admiral Sims's speech. The mossages are on both sides of the question. Some demand drastic action against him. Others demand that the Senate stand by Admiral Sims. A prominent member of the Senate declared the majority of the telegrams were favorable to Admiral Sims. It is plain that if the controversy is carried to a point in the Senate where there is a serious attempt to have Senate action taken against him, it will cause an extremely bitter fight.

"Mystery Airplane Wing"

Invention Announced

The invention of a new "mystery rirplane wing" was announced yesterday by G. M. Williams, general manager of the Dayton Wright Company. In the announcement, it was asserted that the new wing will increase the carrying capacity of an airplane five times, and add to its speed. It is also claimed that with the new wing an airplane can alight in a restricted area through ability to reduce speed in the air.

While Mr. Williams did not describe the construction of the new, wing, it is known that the Dayton Wright concern has been experimenting for some time with a "wariable camber wing." The concern built one machine with such a wing, and shipped it to Paris late last year to compete in the international Gordon Bennett race, but it did not fly there.

The variable camber wing is so arranged that the pilot can alter the curve of the wing while it is in flight. The greater the curve the larger the curve of the wing while it is in flight. The greater the curve the larger the curve of the wing while it is in flight. The greater the curve the larger the curve of the wing while it is in flight. The greater the curve the larger the curve of the wing while it is in flight. The greater the curve the larger the curve of the wing while it is in flight. The greater the ving. the faster is its speed. By maneuvering it so that a tremendous camber, or curve, is obtained, the speed is materially reduced.

Decorative Art Encouraged

A group of paintings by thirty-five contemporary artists will be on exhibition at the Belmaison gallery, Wanamaker's, from now until the close of summer. A special purpose is involved. It declares a procedure the firm expects to put into full effect next fall. This is to encourage the development of art as applied to the uses of modern architecture and decoration by offering to all. artists the use of the gallery for frequent exhibitions and as a permanent salesroom for their work. Thus unpatronized young painters will have a chance to exhibit to the public.

The directors of the gallery, according to Ruby Ross Goodnow, who is in charge, hope by this plan to stimulate the interest of people who are actually in process of building houses, as well as the decorators and architects, by giving permanent space and publicity to decorative art.

The present exhibition, which illustrates the late tendencies, was planned and arranged by a committee composed of George Biddle, Hunt Diederich, Andrew Dasburg, Bernard Gussow, William Zorach and William Yarrow.
